SHOOT BIG GAME

Mrs. J. B. Yeardeley, of California, and Some of Her Exploits.

Freud by a Grizzly Bear—A Woman Who Sees Her Time Hunting the Footprints of the Sierras in Pursuit of Big Game.

(Copyright, 1895.)

HAMPION hunter of the United States is Mrs. J. B. Yeardeley, of the Sierra Nevada mountains.

It is not possible to give her a more definite address than that, because she and her husband spend most of their time ranging the foothills and the heights of the Sierras, hunting for bears, deer, wildcats, mountain lions and anything else which they consider of enough consequence to shoot.

For the last dozen years they have been familiar figures in the Sierra Nevada, particularly in the region surrounding King's river canyon, although they have sometimes extended their hunting expedition as far north as Yosemite valley.

They have a little ranch in the mountains, ten or twelve miles from the King's river canyon, to which they usually go during the worst part of the rainy season, and they sometimes spend there a month or so during the spring and summer, putting in and caring for a little crop of corn and vegetables.

"But, during the last six years," said Mrs. Yeardeley, "I have spent three times as many nights lying on the ground wrapped in a blanket as I have in bed under a roof. Do I like this kind of a life? Of course I do, or I wouldn't follow it. My husband and I have both acquired the real hunter's mania, and we'd rather hunt than do anything else in the world. We came to the range in the first place for his health, and after we had been there for a little while he began to go hunting for amusement. I didn't like to stay at home alone, and so I tramped along with him. He let me shoot his gun a few times, and then I decided I'd have a gun of my own, and pretty soon I was as enthusiastic a hunter as he."

Mrs. Yeardeley has a complete buckskin suit which she wears when she goes hunting. And there is probably not another woman in the United States who needs to worry as little about clothes as does she. Her buckskin neither rips, tears, nor wears out, and its fashions never change. She wears a short, scant-looking jacket, or coat, a pair of breeches just like a man's, and over these a very scant skirt reaching to the knees. The latter she frequently leaves off, especially if she is expecting to go where there is much underbrush. Sometimes she wears leather leggings and stout, hob-nailed shoes, and sometimes hunting boots, that reach to the knee.

She makes a picturesque-looking figure in her buckskin suit, with a broad-brimmed felt hat on her head and her rifle over her shoulder—more picturesque than she will in a few years, perhaps, for, notwithstanding her constant and vigorous exercise, she has begun to put on flesh, after the manner of the Californian matron of middle age. And she already fears that she will some time have to give up her favorite occupation. And it must be confessed that constant exercise does not seem to do much for her. Mrs. Yeardeley's face and hands and neck are brown and leathery, and her hair lacks that gloss and beauty which result only from much care and frequent brushing.

Much practice has made her a good shot, and the tale of her troubles is a long one. Most important of them all is a grizzly bear which she killed three years ago. Then she has to credit three black bears, with one of which, however, she conscientiously explains that she had the assistance of her husband, although she finally fired the fatal shot. Her deer number two or three every season, and she has killed one mountain lion, two wolves, and of coyotes, foxes and other small game so many that she long ago ceased to keep account.

"Of course, I am proudest of my grizzly," said Mrs. Yeardeley, "and I think I have a right to be very proud of him, because it was very uncertain for awhile whether he was going to kill me or I him. My husband and I had been hunting together, but somehow we had got separated, and he was off in another canyon. I saw the bear a full minute before he saw me, but I wasn't where I could see his head, and so I didn't think at first about his being a grizzly. If I had, maybe I'd have sneaked away without taking a shot. But I noticed the trees around me as I always do before I shot at a bear, and stood near one which I could climb easily if I had to. Then I banged away, and the bear faced around and stopped off at Las Vegas. Hot Springs and Grand Canyon of the Colorado river. The first named is a most delightful resort in the Rocky mountains of New Mexico, with mineral waters, hot baths, invigorating climate and varied scenery. After June 29 the splendid Montezuma Hotel, rebuilt and under new management, will luxuriously care for you.

The Grand Canyon is reached by a half-day's stage ride from railroad station at Flagstaff, Arizona. The trip is comfortably made at moderate cost. Everything you have seen dwarfs in comparison with the true thing of nature. The Grand Canyon is a magnificent sight. It is a magnificent sight. It is a magnificent sight.

came for me, and I went up there just as fast as ever I could. And I wasn't a second too soon, either, for the bear tore one of my shoes with his claw. When I got to a safe place in the tree and stopped to take breath and look around me, I found I still had my gun. I haven't the slightest idea how I managed to climb the tree with it, and I never thought of it until now. But when I got
